About GMAT

The GMAT stands for Graduate Management Admission Test. It is administered by Graduate Management Admission Council (or GMAC) and required for admission to most U.S., Canadian, and European business school MBA programs. Also, the GMAT test result can be used for admission to business PhD program, such as Harvard Business School DBA program. Many local universities entry tests are based on GMAT pattern.

GMAT exam does not test any specific knowledge in business or other subjects. Rather, it tests the “mental intelligence” and the ability to make decision under time pressure.

GMAT Score and MBA Admissions importance to the test for two good reasons: it allows the school to compare applicants from different backgrounds according to the same numerical scale; moreover, the average GMAT score is taken into account in the various business school rankings.

At most schools, the GMAT is a deciding element in your application. Along with your undergraduate grades, your score on the GMAT determines your “academic ability”. Although everyone refuses to compare it to an IQ test, the GMAT implicitly provides the school with an indication of your ability to follow the MBA courses.

Test Fee

The fee to take the Graduate Management Admission Test® (GMAT) is US$250 worldwide.
